SOLDIERS AT FORTY

The second reserve of the French army consists of men whose average age is 40 years. In the beginning of the war it was not expected that these men would be required to go into battle at the front, but France's manpower has been consumed at a rapid pace, and now these mature men are fighting and winning laurels every day. The War Office of France is said to be highly pleased at the valor and strength of these men.

Commenting upon the foregoing the Houston Post says:

"There is lesson in this for the men of 40 in the ranks of business and of labor—those men who have become discouraged in the battle of life and are allowing an adverse fate to keep them from the work that should rightly be theirs. If ever there was need for mature thinkers and doers in the world, they are needed now. Especially does the United States realize this need as never before—and the man of 40 who allows his age to prevent active participation in the deeds of today will be forced to brand himself as a slacker, even though the world may never know it.

The man at 40 has fair reason to expect that his mind and body will remain in good condition for 20 years. The man who is defeated and disheartened with life at 40, therefore, misjudges his capacity if he concludes that his resources are exhausted and that there is not time enough left in which to reorganize his resources, take a fresh start, and reach his goal before he is 60.

The man of 40 is bound to make fewer errors of judgment than he made at 30. At 40 he should be in condition to exert his best powers.—Montgomery Advertiser.

OUR FORCES QUADRUPLED

Today the United States has a fighting force nearly four times as large as when, four months ago, we went to war.

Then our regular army was only 105,000 strong; to that number there has been added by enlistment 180,000. The federalization of the national guard now adds 350,000 more. On April 1 the strength of the guard was only 167,000, but it has more than doubled since.

Four months ago the navy had a personnel of some 62,000. Enlistment has increased that by 75,000 and the naval reserve and naval militia bring the total well above 200,000. The marine corps has its 30,000, the training camps some 50,000 and others arms of the service at least 50,000 more.

All told, army and navy together, we have more than 830,000 men in Federal service today. The fall draft of 687,000 will raise the total to 1,500,000, with another 500,000 soon to come.

When Pershing and his men went across they went as a sample of the quality of Uncle Sam's fighting force. Our friends and our enemies can begin to see now what the quantity of that force can be.—Boston Globe.
